GOULD WALLOPS HALLOWELL

53-6
Gould Academy, with Don Holt playing star ball, walloped Hallowell Academy here Wednesday by a 53-6 score. The Wednesday team scored early in the first period to assume a lead that they steadily increased as the game went along. The work of the Bethel team proved quite inconsistent during the afternoon but they managed to shake runners loose for long touchdowns runs, the longest a 65 yard dash by Tucker in the last period. A pass Tucker to Palmer for 50 yards in the final period also scored. Tucker also made a 30 yard touchdown run while Holt made 25 and 14 yard touchdown jaunts.

The only Hallowell counter came in the final period, a pass Graves to Nickerson, on the old sleeper play. Gould collected 13 first downs the losers' 8. Four of Hallowell's first downs came by way of the air. Graves was the outstanding man on the Hallowell team.

VARIETY SHOWER

A very enjoyable evening was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burris on Saturday evening when a surprise variety shower was given Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Burris. An original poem sent by Mrs. Doris Lord was read. The couple then opened their gifts which included linen, money, electrical appliances, and many useful dishes. GOULD ACADEMY

The following committee has been chosen to make arrangements for the Dance to be given by the Boys' Dormitory Nov. 5: Chairman, Herbert Foote; Decorating, George Adams; Music, Nathaniel Bartholomae; Refreshments, Carl Tucker.

At a meeting of the Camera Club, under the direction of Carroll P. Bailey, the following officers were elected for the coming year:

President—Romeo Baker
Secretary—Irving Brown
Treasurer—Herbert Foote

VILLAGE NIGHT OFFICER TO CONTINUE

About 50 men attended the special meeting of the Bethel Village Corporation Monday evening when the question of the continued employment of a night police officer was to be decided. After the moderator, F. E. Hanscom, was unanimously elected, the meeting proceeded in spite of attempts to delay action.

When the second article had been read—to see what action the Corporation will take relative to the employment of a police officer or night watchman during the period, or any part thereof, between the date of this warrant and the date of the annual Corporation meeting—F. E. Russell moved that the meeting adjourn without date. This was defeated 15 to 9. Fred Clark then offered the motion to pass over the article, which was lost 16-9. Both Mr. Russell and Mr. Clark felt that such action should be taken up at the annual meeting. Assessor Gerard Williams stated that the time from now to the annual March meeting is 20 weeks, and Elmer Bean moved that an officer be employed for that period. D. Grover Brooks suggested that the question be decided by ballot, which it was voted to do. The result was 19 yes—16 no.

The article on providing money was tabled until the price was established, although the motion to raise $600 was made by Jesse Chapman. The rate was fixed at $21 a week and it was voted to raise $420, to be paid out of the general fund and to be levied in the 1939 assessment.

The voters decided to raise $105 to purchase a portable clock and 10 fixed stations, to record the performance of duty by the night police. This sum is also to be paid from funds now on hand and raised by assessment next year.

FORESTRY AGENT NAMED

FOR SOUTHWESTERN MAINE

Ernest A. Rand, Cumberland Center, has been appointed district forestry agent in the hurricane-struck area of southwestern Maine, Director Arthur L. Deering of the Maine Extension Service announced early this week.

Mr. Rand began work Monday and his appointment is for three months. He will work with woodlot and timberland owners in Oxford, Cumberland and York counties, in those towns hit by the hurricane of Sept. 21.

Mr. Rand has many years of experience in various branches of forest management and lumbering. He has been a timber cruiser, fire warden and for the last nine years has been manager of extensive forest holdings in Franklin and Oxford counties.

Commenting on the appointment, Director Deering said that farmers whose woodlots were levelled by the storm are looking to the Extension Service for help in salvaging their down timber. A man with Mr. Rand's qualifications, with wide experience in the lumber industry and forest management, can help these woodlot owners cut and market their timber to best advantage, Director Deering believes.

The Maine Extension Service regrets that no comprehensive program of assistance has been formulated by agencies delegated to deal with the situation. The Extension Service will be ready to take such a program to woodlot owners when it is prepared.

While Mr. Rand will spend most of his time with woodlot owners, he will establish telephone and mail connections in Cornish, where he can be reached by farmers in the area.

Eugene Norton, who is principal of Laura V. Dams grammar school in South Ellet, spent the week-end at his home here.

SUFFERS SEVERE HEAD WOUND IN FALL

Mrs. Odecia Foster received a bad gash in the back of her head Wednesday evening, when she missed the last step as she was descending the stairway in the home of her daughter, Mrs. Harry Hutchinson. In falling, it is believed she struck her head on the corner of a window sill near the stairway. An artery being cut, Mrs. Foster lost a great amount of blood before the doctor arrived. Several stitches were required to close the wound. She is reported to be resting comfortably.

BIRTHDAY PARTY

Glendon McAllister was given a party in honor of his birthday on Friday evening by his mother, Mrs. Marjorie McAllister. He was the recipient of many gifts. Games were enjoyed and refreshments including a birthday cake were served. Those present were Marlon Chapman, Barbara Coolidge, Barbara Poole, Carolyn Wight, Alice Bennett, Ida Lee Clough, Robert Greenleaf, Stanley Davis, Gilbert Bryant, Homer Smith Jr., Gilbert LeClair and the honor guest.

GOULD TAKES SECOND DEFEAT

Gould Academy went down to defeat Saturday for the second time in as many weeks, this time by South Paris.

In the first period the Bethel eleven played superior ball, taking advantage of a Paris fumble they marched 40 yards for a touchdown with the game only a few minutes old. After the kick-off they again marched from their own 35 to the opponent's 30. But here on a forward pass by Tucker intended for Brown the ball was intercepted by a Paris back on his own 20 yard line and run to the Gould 20. Spurred by this good fortune the South Paris team drove to a touchdown, scored the extra point to tie the ball game up at 7-7.

This apparently was too much for the local eleven as they failed to click either on offense or defense from here on. The loss of the injured Parker Brown was a tough break for the losers. In the second period with the ball on Gould's 40 yard line a bad pass by Mike Thurston went over the head of Tucker and rolled to the 1 yard line where Paris recovered. The winners capitalized again on a tough break for the locals to score on the fourth down from the 10 yard marker.

In the last half both teams battled near the middle of the field most of the half, until South Paris pulled the ancient Statue of Liberty play for a 45 yard touchdown jaunt. Both teams made 10 first downs but South Paris capitalized on every break and thus claimed the victory.

LISTEN TO THIS

By TOM FIZDALE

Changing Scene: A few years ago a comedy team billed as Burns and Allen left New York to fill a vaudeville date in Hollywood. They hopped a sleeper and arrived on the coast alone and unheralded. Last week that same Burns and Allen, plus a retinue of writers, production men, a musical director, and others, totaling seventeen, made one of the fastest rail trips on record between the same towns. Crack trains were held for them both in New York and Chicago. Time marches on.

Betty Winkler

Girl Alone: Betty Winkler, beautiful star of the Girl Alone daily dramas on NBC, is very seldom alone. Her beauty and charm, and the fact that she likes people, keep her constantly surrounded by friends and admirers. But she was quite alone one day this week when she canceled all dates to be with cousins coming in from out of town and then forgot to tell them the address of her new apartment.

Symphonic Swing: Conductor David Broekman of the CBS Star Theatre orchestra is one man who finds it easy to put symphony into swing or swing into symphony. Before he came to America from Holland he held such important musical jobs as conductor of the National Opera of Holland, conductor of the Royal French Opera and the Holland Civic Opera—but he also spent years playing in gypsy bands just to get the spirit of the thing.

Long Deserved: Music arrangers, those hard-working technicians who are often responsible for the success of many name orchestras and musical programs, seldom win the spotlight. But Bob Strong, arranger for the Saturday night Avalon Time show on NBC has won air billing—the only arranger to be so recognized on a current network production.

Bob Strong

Big Moment: No one in the world's largest city, New York, was more thrilled last week than seventeen year old Jean Farney. Two weeks ago she walked from her home on a farm near Cedar Rapids, Iowa, into that town to get an audition with Horace Heidt. He liked her voice. The following Sunday she made her radio debut on his NBC program and last week opened with him at the Strand theatre in the Big Town.

All-American Girl: Betty Jane Wells might well deserve the title of All-American Girl. She's the only girl in the big cast of the popular NBC juvenile program, Jack Armstrong, All-American Boy.

Famous Addresses: You can add to your list of famous addresses, which include such entries as 10 Downing Street, The White House, etc., 79 Wistful Vista. That's the address millions of radio listeners turn to each Tuesday night for some of the best laughs of the week. You're right—the home of Fibber McGee.

Personality: Tommy Riggs, who with his voice-child, Betty Lou, is starred each Saturday night on their own NBC program, has decided that he has made his little girl very real to listeners. She has been invited to parties, offered scholarships by girls' schools and been asked over to play by the neighbor's children.

Five Sisters: We know a man who listened to the Eddie Cantor show for two years before he realized it wasn't One Man's Family.

West Paris

Melvin Laatsch, Professor of Political Science at Burlington, Vermont, will preach at the Universalist Church Sunday morning. Frederick W. Smith of Waterville, Secretary of the Maine Civic League will speak at the Universalist Church next Sunday evening.

ON HIS TRAIL

Roger Williams Refused

To Yield to Persecution

Refusing to submit to the religious persecution of early Seventeenth century days in England, Roger Williams, a young Puritan minister, came to the New England colonies.

Even here, however, he found an absence of the freedom which he sought and his years of preaching in the Salem settlement of Massachusetts were marked by his open opposition to "compulsory taxation to support the church, the forcing of people to drop everything and go to church every time the town bell rang." He protested, also, the action of the English crown in giving away land which he contended rightfully belonged to the Indians.

The persistence of Williams in teaching this strange new doctrine aroused the indignation of leaders of the Salem settlement and eventually resulted in Roger being banished from the village, relates Leslie Hartley in the Washington Star.
Leaving hastily without his family,
Williams headed south to a refuge with his friends, the Indian tribe called the Narragansetts, who lived along the shores of the bay named after them.

Here he continued his preaching and was joined by his family and a few friends, the little colony buying land from the Indians. In 1644 Williams obtained a charter from England and the settlement of Providence became known for its tolerance and freedom from religious bigotry. Eventually it became known as the state of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, smallest, but one of the most independent states in the Union.

Captain Kidd Not Worst

Among the Busy Pirates

Captain Kidd is perhaps the least known figure in pirate history, but not the worst, asserts a writer in the Portland Oregonian. Some say he was not a real pirate, but he certainly did some bad things when he got over there in the Indian ocean. After a trial in England, he was condemned to death and was hanged on May 23, 1701. Some of "Captain Kidd's treasure" was located on Gardiner's island, off the eastern end of Long Island.

Far worse was the buccaneer, Henry Morgan. Born in Wales, he sailed to the New World in his youth and joined a band of pirates in the Caribbean sea. Rising to be their leader he became more cruel than any who had led them before. "Set a thief to catch a thief" seems to have been the plan of the English king. Morgan was sent to Jamaica as governor, with orders to stop piracy, and captured some of his one-time comrades.

Roberts and Teach were terrors of the sea after Morgan and Kidd had breathed their last. Roberts was something of a dandy, wearing stylish clothes and a necklace, even a cross. He told his men they ought not to steal hard liquor, but he let them drink and plunder. Teach was a ruffian type, and tried to make himself look as ugly as possible. People called him "Blackbeard." At length he was shot when his ship was captured by Virginia colonists and British sailors.

CITIZEN OFFICE

The SNAPSHOT GUILD

HALLOWE'EN

"What's inside?" This snapshot could well fit into a Halloween series telling the story of Jack-o-lantern.

MY snapshot calendar shows that Hallowe'en is just around the corner. It's time for owls to hoot, witches to fly, jack-o-lanterns to grin, and ghosts to walk through moonlit graveyards, no doubt clank-ing their chains. And for camera fans, the weird-picture season will open.

Weird pictures are interesting to take at any time—but even more fun at Hallowe'en. And with a few easy tricks, you can get effects that smack of genuine witchery.

Odd lighting effects are simple.
In a group picture indoors, you can obtain a strange "firelight" effect by placing your photo lights on the floor in front of your subjects. Don't let the lights show in the finder or shine on the lens. To picture a face floating in air, put the photo light at the bottom of a long cardboard tube—and let the subject hold the top of the tube just below his chin.
The room lights must be turned off.

Weird shadows are picture-material. Have a subject in witch costume stand in front of a photo bulb, and picture the grotesque shadow cast on the opposite wall.
Or, place the light close to the wall, to illuminate it brightly, and let your subject sit between the camera and the light. Interesting silhouettes can be made in this way. A plain light colored wall is best.

Make "ghost" pictures by double exposure. Place the camera on a table, and take a short exposure of some furniture. Then, without moving the camera or winding the film, have a subject draped in a white sheet step into the corner, and open the camera for the second, shorter exposure. With correct exposure the "ghost" will be transparent—and the furniture or wallpaper will show through him. To be safe, try several shots with different ex-posure times.

Weird pictures are not all of Hallowe'en. There are children's costume parties, rich in possibilities for "memory" snapshots. Take them with odd lightings and shadow effects, and they will be all the better.
And Hallowe'en preparations provide picture chances. You can make a splendid picture-story out of the jack-o-lantern . . . a series of pictures showing the purchase of the pumpkin, the carving, and the final result grinning from a front window.
Indeed, at Hallowe'en there's never a dull moment for the camera.
Get yours ready now.

JIM WELLS, from the kitchen, called to his wife, who was entertaining the school teacher and the minister's wife in the front room:

"I'm goin' down ter the store fer a leetle spell, Rissie!"

"Land, Jim," Rissie snorted, "run along!" Turning to her guests, she exclaimed: "Jest as if he hadn't been goin' ter the store reg'lar three nights a week for the last 20 years."

Jim muttered, "Thought I'd tell yer," and sat down in the kitchen to pull on his rubbers. He could hear Rissie (who thought that he had gone) still talking.

"I can read Jim jest like an open book. My birthday's next week, and I can tell yer right now what he's goin' ter give me! One of the 'lectric lamps Dave Hall's got in his store! With a blue shade. I seen him fingerin' the fringe whenever I've been in the store with him, an' he's asked all manner o' pointed questions. He's as simple ter read as ABC!"

Jim slipped quietly out, muttering to himself. In the road he stopped a moment, then laughed and hurried on.

On his wife's birthday, Jim went down to the lower end of the village to work. When he reached home, Rissie commanded him: "Wash up good and proper! Mis' Dennett and Miss Wendell are comin' over fer my birthday supper."

Jim's eyes twinkled. "S'good," he muttered, and disappeared into the bedroom.

When he heard Rissie at the door admitting her guests, he slipped out and tucked a large box under the table just beside her chair.

When they came to the table, Rissie, with well-feigned surprise, picked up the two packages which she found at her place. Admiring and exclaiming, she opened them, while the donors simpered in embarrassment.

"A tatin' doily an' an embroidered towel! Ain't they jest handsome, Jim? Land, I can't thank you ladies enough!"

Rissie looked a little questioningly at Jim, who made no sign, and they sat down. Rissie felt the box beside her, jumped up, and pulled it out.

"I declare!" she exclaimed. "Is this a present from you, Jim?"

Jim nodded.

Rissie exchanged a knowing glance with her guests. With shaky fingers she tore off the papers and opened the carton. While the other two women stood with bated breath, she reached in, made a startled movement of her hand, and drew out a plain glass candle-holder and a long, ugly, over-decorated yellow candle! The two women looked at Jim and then back at Rissie's flushing face.

"How—how lovely!" they gasped, at last.

"Jest about fit your parlor mantle, won't they, Rissie?" Jim piped. Rissie gaped despairingly in the carton and drew out the other candlestick.

"A pair!" said Mrs. Dennett, trying to be tactful. "Two always look so nice, one on each end."

When the meal was finished Rissie announced: "I'm goin' ter make you folks right ter home now. It's colder in the front room, so we'll stay right here in the sittin'-room."

Jim drew his rocker up to the stove and sat down with his feet on the hearth.

"It's Wednesday night, Ain't you goin' down ter the store, Jim?" Rissie asked.

"Nopet!" Jim answered. "Guess I'll stay ter home."

"What's got inter yer!" Rissie exclaimed.

Conversation lagged. Rissie sighed. At last she jumped up.

"I declare! I b'lieve it's nicer in the front room, after all."

Her guests followed her, and shivered involuntarily as they passed out of the warmer room. They made an effort to be cheerful but the creaking of Jim's chair startled them, and the front room grew colder. It was early when they repared to leave, and Rissie hardly urged them to stay. There was a tone of pity and condescension in their good-night to Rissie.

Rissie came back from the door and dropped into a chair. Jim, smiling and bearing a large box, came from the bedroom.

"I've got another present for yer, Rissie," he offered.

"One's enough!" she snapped.

"It's—it's somethin' you'll like."

He drew out a lamp with a soft rose-and-blue shade.

"It's somethin' like what Dave had at the store," he went on, "but it's nicer. I sent ter town. I knowed you wouldn't want Mis' Dennett ter see it. She'd be makin' half a dozen jest like it by tomorrow."

Rissie turned. As she gazed at the lamp, her eyes softened with delight.

Jim chuckled wickedly, "I can read you jest like a book, easy as ABC!"

The Star

LIVING as they did, in California, the Cadby family thought perhaps less of moving pictures than their sisters elsewhere. They were a beautiful family, too, beautiful by reason of that inheritance of good features and perfect health which insures the real thing.

All that is, except Catherine. She had the perfect health; but there it stopped. No one knew where that odd mouth came from that made strangers almost lose their self-control when they bought fruit. No one could imagine where that hair, that seemed made for a comedian's wig, ever entered the smooth-headed comely Cadby group.

But there it was; unconsciously humorous; a tragedy for herself and a stifled regret for father and mother.

Then one day a polite person, too polite, asked Mrs. Cadby if the company might go on location on her land. She knew the slogans and assented, seeing that her five lovely daughters were safely in the house and determining to keep them there. Of Catherine Cadby there was no thought at all. She was surely immune.

Thus it came about that Catherine, more than ordinarily absurd in an antiquated costume, leading a half-grown colt that nearly threw her several times, passed directly in front of the polite person as he left the ranch house after obtaining permission to put his company to work.

SHORT SHORT STORY

Complete in This Issue

Catherine jerked up the bossy, whose four legs seemed incongruously wooden and elongated as he struggled to keep his balance, and threw a perfectly natural but supremely comical glance at the stranger.

"Good morning," said he. "Do you work for Mrs. Cadby?"

"I do not," said Catherine, red-denning. "I'm just her daughter."

"Well, that's fine. I'd like to talk to you. No, don't run away. This that thing to a tree, can't you? I don't want to be tripped up," Catherine obediently tied the bossy, who bawled.

"The fact is," said the polite person. "I want you to this morning."

Catherine was by no means meek and she was fast growing furious. She knew well she was no movie queen in embryo. Indeed, her calamitous absurdities were anguish to her. She would like to have walloped the stranger with the switch she had used for the bossy.

"You're surprised," said the polite person, "because you think all movie girls look like dolls. Well, they don't. We want character women. You can play character parts."

Catherine thought wildly. She knew her mother would never consent, but, truth to tell, she was tired of playing nobody while her sisters' beaux trailed over the ranch. She had no hankering for a career, but now a career seemed a way out of an intolerable existence. If she was so funny why not be well paid for it? It was rumored that a grandmother had been Scottish. Perhaps that was what made her ask if he had a contract in his pocket.

"I'll sign you when I see how you screen," smiled the stranger who grew less polite and more likable with further acquaintance. "We'll fix a test for tomorrow."

It was not unusual for the girls to run over to "Los" for an afternoon's shopping or a show. Therefore, Catherine slipped off with no comment.

The test proved that she was even funnier in the film than in daily life, and Catherine, having signed for what to her seemed a huge sum of money on that fateful dotted line, went home, tired, hot and encouraged beyond her dreams.

"Cathy," said Sara, her eldest and prettiest sister, at supper, "don't think me a beast. Only I simply can't let you act as bridesmaid Thursday. You make everyone laugh, and—

"Don't worry, Sara," was the tranquil reply. "I couldn't possibly get off. I have signed a contract this afternoon with the Gaythorn-Satterthwaite Film aggregation. That is, I am en route to be a movie star."

"It's the sun, poor darling," sobbed her mother. "Don't say anything; just telephone for Dr. Smugg, quietly."

"No, I am quite well. Only I'm too funny for private life and I can get paid good money for making a crowd laugh, so why not?"

There was a chorus of protest, but Catherine is billed on Broadway as the "Girl Charlie Chaplin," so it is to be presumed that she won her point.

How Word "Straw" Became Part of Word Strawberry

The origin of "straw" in strawberry isn't known for certain. The word is from the Anglo-Saxon "stream." The dictionary suggests that strawberries were probably so named because the runners resemble straws. Another source regards the word "strawberry" as a corruption of "strayberry," referring to the straying habits of the runners in reproducing new plants.

It is customary to cover strawberry beds with straw to keep down the weeds, fertilize the soil and prevent the earth from soiling the berries. This circumstance is responsible for the name, according to some authorities. A more picturesque theory holds that the name alludes to the old custom of stringing strawberries on straws and selling them on market days for so much a straw.

How to Develop Track Form

Here are some pointers on developing track form: Perfect form is very seldom natural; it must be learned. The first and most important thing for any young runner to strive for is relaxation. Any tenseness you may have while running puts a strain on every one of your muscles and increases fatigue. Therefore your entire performance is slowed down. You must work toward an easy, natural running form, with your body leaning forward and a co-ordination of your arm and leg motion. Have you ever tried running with your hands in your pockets? Try it some time, and you'll see how important your arm movement is in developing a good running stride.

THE PARISH LETTER
OXFORD COUNTY
UNITED PARISH

A group of Parish Young People are expecting a very delightful two days this week. They are going to Mount Desert Island, where they are to be entertained by the young people of the Mount Desert Larger Parish. The program includes a tour around the Island to visit spots of interest; a banquet, a devotional service, with talks from different leaders and representatives of the different delegations present, and a social evening.

Next week the Larger Parish Staff is going to join with other members of the Larger Parish Fellowship of Maine in their Annual Meeting, also with the Mount Desert Parish.

Let everyone remember that there are just two services Sunday morning in the Parish. Willard Bicket of Hooksett, N. H., is coming to preach as a candidate; and we are hoping that all interested will attend one of these services to hear him. He will be at a service at Center Lovell at 10 a. m., and at North Waterford at 11.15. The Young People will meet Sunday evening at North Waterford; and C. William Hersey will have charge of the meeting.

Thursday evening next there will be a Circle Supper at East Stoneham. We will hope to meet you there.

Friday evening, at Center Lovell, the Circle will be ready to give you another of their good suppers. We understand that hereafter the Center Lovell Circle is going to serve supper every month, instead of every two weeks. We had that fact impressed upon our minds when we rode over for supper last Friday and found the Church dark. It might have been worse, for we found some waffles back at the Parsonage, and there during the evening we gathered what we hope may be the beginning of a United Parish orchestra. Doesn't that sound rather good?

The Outing Club met Monday evening for its first meeting of the season at the North Waterford parsonage. Several items of business were attended to, and a pleasant evening of fun was enjoyed by those present. Ralph Knight, after serving as treasurer of the Club for several years, resigned and Miss Barbara Fillebrown was elected in his place. The Executive Committee also appointed the Chairmen of the committees for the Winter Carnival. Their first meeting seems to promise a very pleasant season, indeed, for the Outing Club.

First Soy Beans in 1894

The first soy beans were brought to the United States in 1894 as botanical curiosities.

Reminder for the week—plan to attend your county farm bureau annual meeting.

At the end of June this year, 118,754 blood samples had been tested at the state Bang's disease control laboratories. Of this number 8,833 were positive reactors and they have been slaughtered.

There were more than 185,000 forest fires in the United States last year—about one every three minutes. Twenty-two million acres were burned over, an area equal to that of all New England states except Maine. Particularly in the hurricane struck area, BE CAREFUL WITH FIRE IN THE WOODS THIS FALL.

During the last 10 years dairy herd improvement association members have increased the average yearly butterfat production of their cows by approximately 30 pounds. For this testing service dairymen voluntarily pay about a million dollars a year, received increased annual income estimated at approximately eight million dollars.

Dairymen in six southern New York counties have organized a cooperative dairy breeding association for an experiment in artificial insemination. The practice, new to dairy breeding in this country, makes it possible for one bull to sire as many as 1,000 offspring a year, compared with 30 or 40 under ordinary dairy management. The new method makes it possible for dairymen to organize in large groups, buy the best sires in the country, and know that desirable characteristics are transmitted in their herds.

WAGE AND HOUR DISCUSSION ON RADIO NEXT MONDAY

The Wage and Hour Law will be discussed on the second broadcast of the "United States Government Reports" series to be given over station WGAN on Monday, Oct. 31, at 7:15 p. m.

The broadcast will take the form of an interview between Scott F. Kittredge, Executive Assistant of the National Emergency Council for Maine, under whose auspices the broadcast is conducted, and a representative of the Wage and Hour Division of the U. S. Department of Labor, which will administer "The Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938." It is anticipated that information of much interest and value to both industry and labor will be supplied.

Bill Curves to the Side
The wry-billed player of New Zealand (a stouter, more compact sandpiper), is unique in having a bill that curves to the side, a result, it is said, of searching for food around stones.
